THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION

1. The Funkwerk Radeberg is at present building 10 KW short wave senders, ten of which have been ordered by the Soviet Union. The Radeberg works is regarded by the Soviet side as the most reliable radio in the Soviet Zone. The good work of this organization is especially praised. It was possible, for example, to develop a television transmitter within the space of a year.
2. The centimeter-wave ranging unit for short range (Kurzstreck) navigation built over a year ago (August 1953) and tested on the Falkenberg near Dresden has been ordered to the Soviet Union. It is reported that this equipment is to be manufactured in future by the Radeberg and Niedersiedlitz works.
3. Production of ultra short wave telephone sets amounted to 26 pieces in December 1953
4. Fourteen sets of Stuttgart apparatus and accompanying radio-telegraph accessories were manufactured.
5. Six 20 watt senders were delivered to the Volkspolizei, and one 100 watt sender to the Soviet Union.
6. The material supply situation at Radeberg is good at present. It is not so good at the Niedersiedlitz works, where large electric motors are built. There is a shortage of heat-resistant enameled wire and copper parts for the rotors.
7. The Radeberg works also manufactured 31 power supply units for sea distress senders in December for the Kopenick works.
